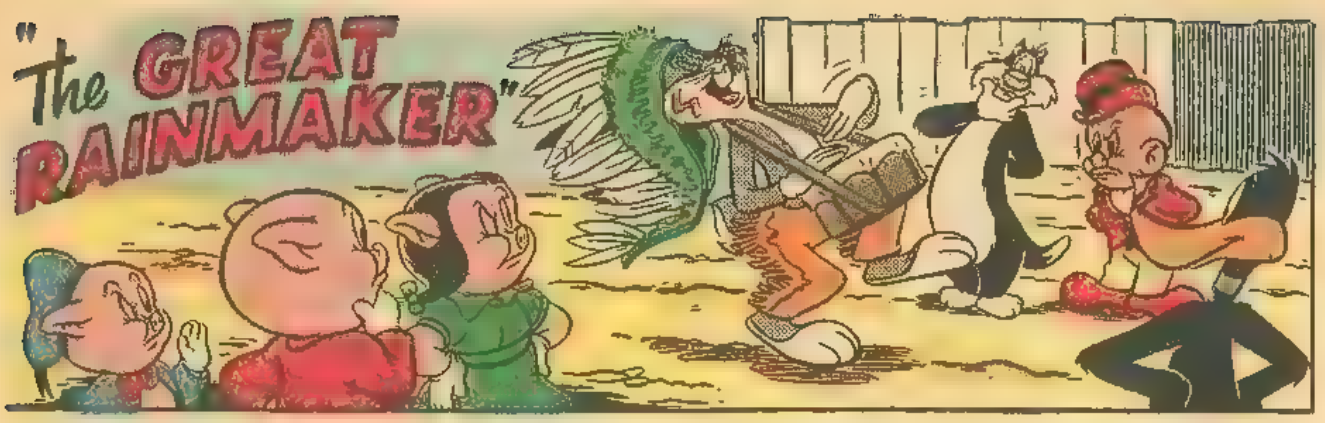
"The GREAT RAINMAKER"



"If we don't get rain soon, I'm out of luck," Porky sighed to Bugs as he looked sadly at his wilted vegetable garden.

"Have you thought of hiring a rainmaker?" Bugs asked helpfully.

"Really, Bugs," Porky frowned. "You get the most ridiculous ideas."

Bugs had a sly look on his face as he replied, "Maybe . . . maybe not."

The next day, when Porky went out to look at his garden, there was Bugs busily forcing ice through a food chopper.

"What in the world are you doing?" Porky asked in astonishment.

"I'm going to seed the clouds with ice," Bugs explained. "Make it rain," he added as he loaded the chopped ice into a rusty old cannon he had brought with him. Then, he lit the fuse. "Ready!" he warned, just as the cannon exploded the ice into the air.

At that moment, Elmer Fudd came along. "Gwacious! What's that wacket?" he cried.

Bugs importantly explained the principle of seeding the clouds to create rain, but Elmer only laughed.

"Just wait and see, smarty," said Bugs.

But, at noon, the sun was still shining, and Bugs was forced to admit failure.

"Don't worry, Porky," he reassured his friend. "I'll get rain for you—if it takes all summer!"

The following morning, Elmer Fudd, Daffy Duck, and Sylvester were already at the garden when Porky got there. And, a few minutes later, Bugs arrived, dressed up in war paint and feathers. Without a word of greeting, he went into a mysterious dance. Around and around in a circle he frolicked, at the same time thumping on a small drum, and chanting a weird tune.

"Rain dance," Bugs panted. "Learned it from Indian Joe at the cigar store. This will do the trick."

So, once more, they waited . . . and waited . . . and waited. And the sun continued to shine.

"Ha, ha!" laughed Elmer. "Bugs, the Great Rainmaker!"

"You mean fun-maker," sneered Daffy.

That night, Bugs phoned Porky to say, "Got a sure thing, pal."

"You've had two sure things already," Porky reminded him.

"This is for real," Bugs promised.

There was quite a crowd at the garden the next morning. In addition to Elmer, Daffy and Sylvester, Porky invited Petunia and Cicero to see the fun.

Bugs had gathered some wood and was trying to start a fire. "Quiet, everybody," he commanded as the wood burst into flames. Then, gazing intently into the fire and waving his hands over it, Bugs began to mutter, "Makka-loody! Mala-piko! Onna-matta-kono!"

"Oh, foo," Daffy broke in irreverently. "That's just a lot of mumbo-jumbo."

"Just wait," Bugs said.

Suddenly, there was a streak of lightning, a crash of thunder, and the whole sky seemed to open up.

"Rain!" gasped Porky. "Feel it—it's rain!"

"Bugs, you did it!" squealed Cicero.

"Say, Porky," Bugs asked, "do you think this rates a carrot from your garden?"

"A carrot?" Porky shouted. "You'll get a bushel of them when they're big enough!"

"How on earth did you do it?" Petunia asked.

Bugs looked around to make sure no one could hear. "I called the Weather Bureau last night," he grinned. "The forecast for today was—RAIN!"
